Scoring Method of the Manas Prakriti Personality Inventory (MPPI)

The Manas Prakriti Personality Inventory (MPPI) was developed as a multidimensional personality assessment tool intended to identify the predominance of specific Manas Prakriti subtypes based upon cumulative expression of psychological, behavioural, emotional, interpersonal, moral, lifestyle, and observer-rated characteristics described in classical Ayurvedic literature.

Since the inventory contains traits contributing to different Manas Prakriti subtypes, including certain traits shared across multiple subtypes, a structured subtype-wise scoring methodology was adopted.

Item-wise Scoring

Each item in the inventory was assigned a maximum score of 12 according to the scoring format developed for the assessment schedule.

The obtained score for each item reflected the degree of expression or applicability of the corresponding characteristic in the participant.

Higher scores indicated greater expression of the respective characteristic.

Observer-rated traits were independently scored by the investigator according to the same scoring framework based upon direct observation during assessment.

Trait-to-Subtype Mapping

Each inventory item was mapped to one or more Manas Prakriti subtypes according to the descriptions available in classical Ayurvedic references.

Certain traits were considered characteristic of a single subtype, whereas some traits were conceptually shared across multiple related subtypes. In such instances, the obtained item score was allowed to contribute fully to all associated subtypes.

This approach was adopted because Manas Prakriti subtypes are not completely discrete psychological entities and several personality characteristics may overlap across related prakriti patterns.

Subtype-wise Cumulative Scoring

For each participant, scores obtained for all items associated with a particular Manas Prakriti subtype were summed together to obtain the raw subtype score.

Since the number of traits assigned to different prakriti subtypes was not equal, direct comparison of raw cumulative scores could produce scoring bias favouring subtypes containing larger numbers of items.

Therefore, percentage normalization was adopted for final interpretation.

Calculation of Maximum Obtainable Score

The maximum obtainable score for each subtype was calculated according to:

- the total number of items mapped to that subtype,
- and the maximum obtainable score per item.

Formula :

$$\text{Maximum Obtainable Score} = (\text{Number of Items Assigned to Subtype}) \times 12$$

Percentage-based Subtype Scoring

To permit standardized comparison between subtypes containing unequal numbers of items, obtained subtype scores were converted into percentage scores.

$$\text{Formula : Subtype Percentage Score} = \frac{\text{Obtained Subtype Score}}{\text{Maximum Obtainable Score}} \times 100$$

This method minimized scoring bias resulting from unequal item distribution across different prakriti subtypes and allowed direct comparison of subtype predominance.

Determination of Predominant Manas Prakriti Subtype

The subtype obtaining the highest percentage score was considered the predominant Manas Prakriti subtype of the participant.

The subtype obtaining the second highest percentage score was considered the secondary influencing subtype where relevant.

Thus, final interpretation was based upon:

- relative subtype predominance,
- percentage score comparison,
- and overall personality pattern distribution.

Handling of Overlapping Traits

Certain traits contributed to more than one Manas Prakriti subtype. In such cases, the obtained score for that item was included fully within the cumulative scores of all associated subtypes.

This approach was intentionally retained in order to preserve conceptual fidelity with classical Ayurvedic descriptions, wherein several psychological characteristics overlap across related prakriti patterns.

Distinction Between Questionnaire Sequence and Scoring Structure

The inventory items were arranged according to psychological sequencing and ease of administration; however, scoring was performed separately according to classical Manas Prakriti subtype classification.

Thus:

- questionnaire organization was based upon psychological flow and participant comfort, whereas
- scoring organization was based upon subtype-wise trait mapping and prakriti predominance determination.

This dual-structure approach was adopted to combine:

- psychological ease of administration,
- multidimensional personality assessment,
- and classical Ayurvedic subtype-oriented interpretation.
